That means that in a century the number of women with the disease will have increased by 40%, from 1.7m to 2.3m. There are 13.5 million people alive today who have the disease, with an estimated 2.8 million diagnosed each year. The number of women diagnosed in the UK will increase from 716,000 to 812,000 over the next 20 years. 'Breakthroughs' Researchers from the Royal College of Surgeons (RCS) and Cancer Research UK released their projections as part of a study looking at the way women's lives are affected by the disease. They found that the number of women in the UK living with breast cancer has increased from 716,000 to 812,000 in 20 years. They are also living longer - by around six years. The findings are based on the number of women diagnosed each year, rather than the number of women living with the disease. The researchers estimated that from 2014 onwards, about one in three women will survive the disease for 10 years or more. Researchers say it will take the advances in medicine of the 21st century to deal with the increase in the number of women diagnosed with the disease. They have called for the introduction of diagnostic tests to diagnose the disease in its earlier stages and better treatments. Dr Martin Marshall, a consultant breast surgeon from the RCS, said: "The past 20 years have seen many advances in breast cancer 82157476af
